Walking Up Wideford

I backdate my posts!

Hike

I'm surprised there is no footpath up not through fields (empty or not).

I absolutely love that reddish/purple grass!

Elusive, a beautiful word (and includes "v"!)

[careful, my mother would worry!] -- puple

I completely agree, no need for navigation. You see the destination, you can make it for. For some reason I have a feeling you'll find out you're wrong, and probably it has to do with going through a field, sorry "footpath".

I am so surprised to hear this hill is as tall as Arthur's seat. That's huge!

[not until this photo did I ~~see~~ understand the name of the house, which I must say is incredibly funny given the rock that was found there (and presumably saved)] -- savenock

uing

[there is a nice torch] -- burn

[I am deeply reminded of Charnod, though this burn is clearly quite new] -- corner

According to my quick research, the word "ruin" holds no true meaning. Thus, I'd say the Burn can be called a ruin.

The trees and greenery are very pretty, in particular the large branching one.

[this concrete wall is quite creepy, it reminds me of a museum, or at least the entrance to a graveyard] -- entrance

[the roof could easily be a Guggenheim mock up]
-- roof

Cows

Excited to continue reading about your revelation with respect to Orkney's fun! I so expect it to be cow related (probably because of the title of this section).

[I love the stream!!!] -- Hutton

[I like the sight of expanding plant (new leaves)]
-- droplets

Your description of the cow approach is incredibly accurate, I can see your many experiences have left a mark.

Quarry

The Scottish policies on outdoors are so great and something I'm so grateful for. I am so glad to have the leniency of camping almost anywhere and going to places however I like. Paired with the free bus... heaven for exploration lovers like me!
Something I don't think about much because I basically have no other experience, but definitely something I cherish and want in anywhere I decide to live in for a long time (over 2 years).

Small fluffy creatures? My socks say clouds or sheep.

Omg! I just noticed that the maps are actually maps and not images! so cool! I love the little turbine symbols on them.

[this very flat path to the quarry is not that exciting]
-- concrete

[still unsure of what these are?] -- baby

[the lab coat / protective clothing is looking very sci-fi] -- danger

[such a pretty photo with the purple/red grass] --
Sun

[blue shirt, smiling at me] -- speedy

[cute cute cute flower!] -- pointy

Your safety training doesn't seem to extend far, I would recommend some more.

[the signs look like eyes, gooly] -- flunked

Stone

My quick calculations told me that if the £9B were distributed evenly across all orchards, they would each get about half a million (£250,000 or so). With that money, I would not build a car of stone, but that's just me.

[impressive stone work, good adverbity] -- stone

Home

[this light is in fact beautifully solder yellow green] --

Having seen a few haunted houses myself, I wonder how rare they really are.

My Own Thoughts

My favourite part of this post was discovering the fun alt text halfway through. After, I liked going through and finding them all & seeing references that I'd also noticed/thought of /written down.

My very favourite photo was the final one.

Much love!
